Extradition newest tool to promote peace talks

The Colombian government is stepping up efforts using extradition to maintain or start peace talks with armed groups, with mixed results.

TWO CASES

Nicolas Palumbo, a.k.a. Sabino Trujillo

On Monday, the Colombian government offered to extradite Palumbo, who is also known as Sabino Trujillo, to the United States, where he faces charges of drug trafficking and terrorism.

Santos Mancuso

On Tuesday, the Colombian government announced that it will begin extradition talks with Santos Mancuso, who is the leader of the AUC, or United Self-Defense of Colombia, a paramilitary group.

SHAPING POLICY

The Colombian government is considering making extradition a key tool in its efforts to end the country’s long history of civil war.

BATTLEFIELD

The government has offered to extradite several leaders of armed groups, including Palumbo and Mancuso, as a way to put pressure on them to negotiate a peace deal.

FAR CRY

The AUC has rejected the government’s extradition offers, saying they are a way to pressure them into giving up their weapons.
